Invidia, quæ proprie sic dicitur, plus est quàm odium; Nam invidia est detestantis, & abominantis alterius turpitudinem cum infamia conjunctam: Odium verò est adversantis malum, quod videtur, & alicujus vel facto, vel dicto læsi: vel se læsum opinantis; Illi gratia, huic amor, opponitur. In invidia homo aut res est apud multos; odio & multis, & uni esse possumus. Invidia dicta, quia non libenter videmus, neque qui fortunâ meliore, quàm vellemus, utuntur, neque qui sequuntur ea quæ ipsi non probamus. Invidia etiam dicitur dolor conceptus ex aliena prosperitate: Nam invidere propriè est, non videre; Not to see, ab in vel negante, vel augente, & videre; Quia verò quibus non favemus, eos & non videmus libenter, & eorum bona ægrè cernimus, nec ferimus eos benè agentes videre; ideò Metonym. invidere est æmulari, & alterius felicitate offendi. Nature hath envied, (i. e. refused, or denied to give) Oil to grow in Africa; Natura oleum invidet Africæ; Plin. To envy another man's honour; Honori alicujus invidere; Cic. I envy, or repine at the good estate of the Trojans; Troadas invideo; Ovid. The
